

FIGURE 3 – Split photograph depicting different phases of the Tanoma passive mine drainage treatment system. The upper frame shows the drilling operation to relocate the discharges to the treatment area, and the lower frame shows the treatment system under construction. The excavator is beginning the placement of spent mushroom compost which serves as substrate for the aerobic wetland treatment cells.